I've never been so close to the bottom before I never have held this for so long But every time I lift my head up something always seem to bring Something always seems to bring it down What do you expect from, a man with nothing left I gave you everything but I guess it wasn't enough You wanted attention over love and affection I thought you were and it and I realized you're not You were the farthest from perfection I wish that I could learn to forgive you We never really slowed it down before Look at what we had, what we built You threw it all and brushed it right off I don't like it at bottom theres no room for forgiveness now I gave you everything but I guess it wasn't enough You wanted attention over love and affection I thought you were and it and I realized you're not You were the farthest from perfection I wish that I could learn to forgive you What do you expect from, a man with nothing left I wish that I could forgive you