

When you're old enough
When you've been through it
You won't know what it's like
You can't see things the same
But you're closer now
Did you close your eyes?
Did I close them first?
You weren't strong enough
I'm no stronger than you
But the years take their toll on us all
I'm starting to see why you drifted away after all
And no one explains to you
Where the things go that you love
'Till they're already gone
You held on for us
The house gathered dust

We were selfish then
And we held on to things
But they're all gone now
Did I take too long?
Did I ask too much?
I didn't love you as much as I could
The silence is killing me now
I'm starting to see why you drifted away after all
And no one explains to you
Where the things go that you love
How many times will I try to pretend that you're here?
And I had a few questions I never got to ask you in time
'Cause you'd already gone
