

Counting Flaws

Front Porch Step

Took a deep breath like you were gasping for air
When you pulled me in the cold to say you don't really care
Anymore
Was your anxiety a lie or was something in the weather?
Why was it so easy telling me that you could do better?

But now to fall asleep I've just been counting flaws
But now I don't wake up to the voice that told me you'd love them all

You said you'd love them all

Now, I'm picking up the pieces of the words I left unsaid
And I'm ashamed to let you know
There's not one day that I regret getting dizzy
From just spinning hanging from your fingertips
I was content with being no one
When I was someone that you kissed

But now to fall asleep I've just been counting flaws
But now I don't wake up to the voice that told me you loved them all

You said you loved them all

I was low-hanging fruit
Your teeth so easily sank
And now I'm grasping at straws
For a reason to not drink

But now to fall asleep I've just been counting flaws
But now I don't wake up to the voice that told me you loved them all

You said you loved them all

Was your anxiety a lie or was something in the weather?
Why was it so easy?
Why was it so easy?

Was your anxiety a lie or was something in the weather?
Why was it so easy?
Why was it so easy?

Was your anxiety a lie or was something in the weather?
Why was it so easy?
I wish it was easy

Picking up the pieces of the words I left unsaid
And I'm ashamed to let you know
There's not one day that I regret getting dizzy
From just spinning hanging from your fingertips
I was content with being no one
When I was someone that you kissed

But now to fall asleep I've just been counting flaws
But now I don't wake up to the voice that told me you loved them all

You said you loved them all

You said that you'd love them all
You said that you'd love them all
You said that you'd love them all
You said that you'd love them all