

Through the Window

Grace Slick

I should have known it the minute you wouldn't look into my eyes I saw the light in the distance still it took me by surprise So I ran down to your house but before I reached the door

Through the window, through the window
I could almost touch the pane
I could see you in the firelight
I was in the pouring rain
Through the window, through the window
I could almost touch the pane
I could hear her, she was laughing
I could hear her say my name

I couldn't hold back the anger there was so much to do and say I shook my fist at the window sure that I would have my way But the anger turned to pain as I turned into the night again

Can you imagine the way that I feel Broken emotion, love is too real
