

Still Learning

Graham Colton

I let you go when the music stopped
And called it growing up
I paved the road of the promises that never start
And all the scars I've been talking about
Were never stitched back up
There's a house of burned down love but the door's still locked

I'm still learning how to live without you
I keep running but I can't move on

I get along as good as new
I'm just a bit worn out
I tell myself got something left to talk about
Another night, the storm that passes
You're the fire I started I can't put it out
What could've been if time ran out, never know, I never know

I'm still learning how to live without you
I keep running but I can't move on
I'm still lying to myself hiding the hard truth
And I'm still learning how to live

Without you
Without you
Without you
Without you

I can't sleep
I'm lying without you
I let you go when the music stopped
I can't breathe
I'm dying without you
I'm still learning, I'm still learning

I'm still learning how to live without you
And I keep running but I can't move on
I'm still lying to myself hiding the hard truth
And I'm still learning how
I'm still learning how
I'm still learning how to live
