

The Cure

Gretta Ray

London knows me in a way that nowhere else does Sees me at my strongest, and when I'm lost London shows me who I am and who I once was When my head and heart both have their wires crossed

London, hold me as I'm coming down from this high He's all I've ever known, but then again I won't deny that This has heralded a shift within me during this time What I have come to find is that no matter what I might have to leave behind

There's growth in falling apart, there's laughter between the d arker moments, romance in the loneliness
There's hope in this broken heart, dancing amidst the disaster of it all
Crumbling then crawling back to who I was before
I'm crying out for the cure

I awake each day to feel the weight of the change Heavy on my chest, and try to embrace it
As I make my way toward the underground train Swear I see his face amongst all these strangers

Love is a ruthless thing, but it won't dare to render me unless Bruises show resilience, let brilliance override and agony subs ide

There's growth in falling apart, there's laughter between the d arker moments, romance in the loneliness
There's hope in this broken heart, dancing amidst the disaster
of it all
Crumbling then crawling back to who I was before
I'm crying out for the cure

Maybe I'm okay without your advice Guess that our old ways are no longer right I'm missing you like mad, no I don't need to think twice But there's more to this limited life than hoping you'll leave on the light

There's growth in falling apart, there's laughter between the d arker moments, romance in the loneliness
There's hope in this broken heart, dancing amidst the disaster
of it all
Crumbling then crawling back to who I was before
I'm crying out for the cure