

Giving The World Away

Hatchie

You can see your horizon dissolve into nothing with every passing hour

If you tore up your thoughts and put them in motion, would you still feel desire?

What is it that makes us feel so invincible, like life is by design?

Could you regenerate all you'd hoped for yourself? Could you start again?

Stop giving the world away

Stop giving the only heart you've got

Stop giving the world away

Stop giving the only heart you've got

All it took was a moment of recognition to turn your sweet to sour

But can I offer a reason to re-imagine how you still hold the power?

If you could take a break to recalibrate you'd see beyond the sky

I only want your world to keep you awake, don't lose your chance to fly

Stop giving the world away

Stop giving the only heart you've got

Stop giving the world away

Stop giving the only heart you've got

And in the end you'll go away

For your cause, and I wait, dissipate with the days

For your cause I'll stay

What if what drew us to one another triggers our demise?

What if what drew us to one another triggers our demise?

What if what drew us to one another triggers our demise?

What if what drew us to one another triggers our demise?

What if what drew us to one another triggers our demise?