

I Should Have Been Watching You

Hayden

daylight slipping away, down a mountainside over the trees and their lines and i look out past your eyes through the windows i stare as the fields half disappear so much beauty out there as the shadows reach for the bar the place turns yellowish-like and everything seems alright except that this is the last day i get to spend with you and now it's dark and it's through i should have been watching you.