

Fault Line

Jack River

I been walking, talking to myself
Following words in my garden
Flowers burn and turn back to the sun
It begins, I run

I should've loved you the first time
You were so bright, I was so blind
I could've said that you were all mine
Why did I leave you on my fault line?

Is it a thing to die for, heavy heart of gold?
A thing to lie for, this something that I sold?
I've been walking, walking from myself
Following you to my only fear

I should've loved you the first time
You were so bright, I was so blind
I could've said that you were all mine
Why did I leave you on my fault line?

Running 'round this crazy town
It's a cold night in the mean streets
Falling out, falling in
And all I can hear is your hands
Standing here, waiting there
It's a white light in a blue room
I'm on fire, I confide
I'm a twisted, fucked-up fool, I know

And I should've loved you the first time
You were so bright, I was so blind
I could've said that you were all mine
Why did I leave you on my fault line?
I should've loved you the first time
You were so bright, I was so blind
I could've said that you were all mine
Why did I leave you on my fault line?
