

Later

Jed Madela

How could you come with me, when you knew all along, that you had to go?

How could you watch me sleep so close to you pretending not to know?

How could you memorize my name and forget who I am?

How could you think you're still the same believing I can?

It's too late to start pretending

It's too late for a new beginning

Later than the sunset

Later than the rain

Later than never to love you again

How could you ask for more with an innocent smile trusting me to stay?

How could you close the door and leave me here supposing I'm OK?

How could you break down my disguise and uncover my fears?

How could you look into my eyes ignoring my tears?

It's too late to start pretending

It's too late for a new beginning

Later than the sunset

Later than the rain

Later than never to love you again

It's too late to start pretending

It's too late for a new beginning

Later than the sunset

Later than the rain

Later than never to love you again

It's too late