Edge of Glory

Joan Baez

My house stands at the edge of glory Steady as the seasons change Dreams of grace arise before me And they call me home again

I went forth with no protection Through a fierce and blinding rain Seeking truth but not perfection Saw my father's face again

Father, father can you hear me Through this swirl of thoughts unsaid All you wanted I did not know All you asked I tried to give

My house stands at the edge of glory Steady as the seasons change Dreams of grace arise before me And they call me home again

Take this hand that I hold out
Meant to bridge the years apart
Come in, come in from the howling wind
To the clearing of my heart

Still and lovely came the morning Gone was my father's face In my house a bright reflection New among my dreams of grace

My house stands at the edge of glory Steady as the seasons change Dreams of grace arise before me And they call me home again
