Small Enough

Jonny Diaz

O God who holds the stars and tells them where to shine:
Can You be small enough to hear me whispering tonight?
You made the mountains high, and filled the oceans deep,
Can You be small enough to feel the pain inside of me?

Sometimes I need a Master with power and with might,
But right now all I need is You to hold me through the night

O God who heals the blind and raises up the dead:
I just need to know You know the hairs upon my head
You shake the night with thunder as lightning breaks the sky,
Can You be small enough to hold me if I start to cry?

Sometimes I need a Master with power and with might,
But right now all I need is You to hold me through the night
Sometimes I need a Maker, One who controls the seas,
But right now all I need is You to calm the storms in me

Right now all I need is You to calm the storms in me.
