Josh Garrels

Children run around
Looking for the sound
Buried underground
Some are lost and found
Waiting for the crown of the King
All over the world

And now I'm caught by heavily sought thoughts
Which are spoken and then whispered
Then released with a shout
Now people shout and they scream
Just to let it all out
They're breaking bricks and bending bars
With their liberated mouths
Un-muted, undiluted, potent poets uprooted
Pierce the heart for a start and then the bones
Feelings unnamed that are put forth in groans
Because every man's a man without a home
My soul will never settle long as the sun is shown
As long as seeds are planted in the heart
And then are grown
Broken wings and all y'all this bird has flown
Through the darkest woods
Now I'm gone to the dawn of a new day
I say, today, that I'm tired
Of acting, and practicing, practical applications
Applied to improve my monetary station in life

Cold blooded strangers telling me what wrong is right
But that's not right
If that were right then I would take what wrong
Now I'm on the green path and singing simple songs
To the son shine, My life's no longer mine
I'm water changed to wine
I'm pardoned for the crimes that I committed
Forgiven, forget it
I'm sick of my old skin so I shed it
I've got dragons dragging on my ankles
As I try to walk, run, flee
Towards the light that woke me up
It leads me towards eternity
So I've got to let it be
Incredibly, edibly, mentally ahead of me
A medley, don't let it be the enemy
There sending me to set it free, you see
The galaxy is readily steadily not dreading me,
Not dreading us,
But Him
Because He came to set it off.

Children run around
Looking for the sound
Buried underground
Some are lost and found
Waiting for the crown of the King
All over the world
