

Doing What You're Told

Josh Pyke

I've been sinking into something
Without thinking about the dumb thing
'Cause what's the point in always doing what you're told
But what's the point in always doing what you're told

We spend too long fighting demons
But you won't change, the odd still evens
So what's the point in always doing what you're told
What's the point in always doing what you're told
So walk the wire to keep our feet above the coals

And I remember
Days of splendour
Walking with our feet pressed to the coals
And I had never
Known a fire
That don't desire to feel a little burn

'Cause I've been sinking into something
Without thinking about the dumb thing
'Cause what's the point in always doing what you're told
But what's the point in always doing what you're told
We walk the wire to keep our feet above the coals
There is no fire that don't desire a little burn
So what's the point in always doing what you're told
What's the point in always doing what you're told (na na na na na)
We walk the wire to keep our feet above the coals (na na na na na)
There is no fire that don't desire a little burn (na na na na na a)
So what's the point in always doing what you're told (na na na na na na)
What's the point in always doing what you're told (na na na na na na)
We walk the wire to keep our feet above the coals (na na na na na na)
There is no fire that don't desire a little burn (na na na na na na a)
So what's the point in always doing what you're told (na na na na na na na)
