

Forgetting Is the Hardest Part

Kane Brown

There's no doubt it was always you.
From that first time I walked you home from school
Till' you stole my heart underneath that August moon
It was always you, it was always you.
Now it hurts to see your pretty smile fade.
I've got a front row seat to watch you drift away
And I know there's nothing left for us to say
But it's okay, it's okay.

There's no getting over you, I've tried to sugar coat the truth
But the missing you is tearing me apart.
Every kiss that I let slip away
Every minute, every single day
The memories make it easy to break a heart
But forgetting, forgetting is the hardest part.

Sometimes I sit here feeling like a ghost
It's that emptiness I think that hurts the most
But a piece of me still holds a little hope
I should just let go, but I can't let go.

There's no getting over you, I've tried to sugar coat the truth
But the missing you is tearing me apart.
Every kiss that I let slip away
Every minute, every single day
The memories make it easy to break a heart
But forgetting, forgetting is the hardest part.

It's time to put myself together
And put pieces back wherever
Maybe one day I'll find love again, again.

There's no getting over you, I've tried to sugar coat the truth
A million times but I'm still torn apart
Every minute, every single day
The memories make it easy to break a heart
But forgetting, forgetting is the hardest part.