China And Wine

Laura Bell Bundy

I was dreaming of a springtime banquet
All the tables were covered in linens of white
Linens of white
Silver lights hung from magnolias
Every hand held a glass, like bells they chimed
Bells they chimed

How they loved with good intentions
Vows too sacred to break apart
In my mind they failed to mention
They could have a change of heart

Like china and wine, everything is fine
Like china and wine, they were fine

I remember walking over boxes
Reading cards from their anniversaries, anniversaries
Fourteen and I didn't want to choose one
But they both had a house and a room for me, they made for me

How they loved with good intentions
I couldn't see them falling apart
In my mind that never forgave them
Now I've had a change of heart

Like china and wine, everything is fine
Like china and wine, I was fine

Now I'm standing at the end of a long aisle
A good man at the other end waiting for me, made for me
The music plays and the veil is lifted
It can take forever to finally see what is meant to be

I'm gonna love him with good intentions
Whether or not it falls apart
Love is fragile, but it won't break as long as you love with all your heart

Like china and wine, everything is fine
Like china and wine, we'll be fine
Like china and wine, everything is fine
Like china and wine, I'll be fine
