

Someone To Forget

Lights

Timebomb tick tock I'm a ticking timebomb
Guess I needed a shoulder to cry on
Saw you tryna put up a firearm, a firearm
I know that we're dying
And the days getting colder
I'm already down but I fight till it's over
You were there from the start
And I know your love hurts
It's a perfect circle
I'm black and purple

I'm over-analyzing your poetry
Wondering if you can say no to me
It's heavier than I thought to carry
Come and get my money

Take my body
Take my bed
Just give me something to forget
All the things we should've said
All the voices in my head
They get louder and louder
Until we're both someone to forget

Someone to forget
Just give me something to forget
All the things we should've said
All the voices in my head
They get louder and louder
Until we're both someone to forget

Someone to forget
Until we're both someone to forget

Love is this superficial nemesis of the mind
Oh I think we've both been wearing it over time
Then you feeling the time past
You turned back and I've fallen behind
Maybe companionship and cease fire's the same
Should've protected it, but damn it love is pain
But I held you so close, in vain

Come and get my money
Take my body
Take my bed
Give me something to forget

All the things we should've said
All the voices in my head
They get louder and louder
Until we're both someone to forget

Come and get my money
Come and get my money
Take my body
Take my bed
All the things we should've said

All the voices in my head
They get louder and louder
Until we're both someone to forget
Someone to forget
Until we're both someone to forget