Every Time I Turn Around

Little River Band

On a cold December mornin', when my demons take control, And the rain turns into thunder, somewhere in my soul, You are the asylum, in the madness of my day, In a world without much kindness, somehow I always find the way.

Every time I turn around,
I can see your shadow right there on the ground,
And every time I call your name,
I can hear a voice that I can't explain,
When I find myself in a faceless crowd,
I know you're right behind me baby, every time I turn around.

In the struggle for survival, every day becomes a year, How to keep a cool perspective, isn't always very clear, I need all the shelter, your lovin' can provide, Like a bridge across the raging river, take me to the other sid e.

Every time I turn around,
I can see your shadow right there on the ground,
And every time I call your name,
I can hear a voice that I can't explain,
When I find myself in a faceless crowd,
I know you're right behind me baby, every time I turn around,
Every time I turn around.

If an ocean stands between us, and my heart begins to pound, I know you're right behind me baby, every time I turn around. Every time I turn around, I can see your shadow right there on the ground, And every time I call your name, I can hear a voice that I can't explain, When I find myself in a faceless crowd, I know you're right behind me baby, every time I turn around.
