

Break The Jaw

Madison Cunningham

I'm walking around
Dragging along
A heart wide open
As a broken jaw
And it's never been so quiet
In the pressure machine

No one's ever smiling
Back at me
But a look can draw blood
So easily
And I wish I could think
Of anything but the cold

I put my weight in your arms and I fell right through
Put my weight in your arms and I fell
Weight in your arms and you let Me fall right through

I may never forgive you
You may never forgive me
We may never forgive each other
But I may never I may never
Forgive myself

Your hair was on my pillow
Your charms undressed
Like treacherous waters
Or a treasure chest
And I didn't know what I was seeing
You or me

I abandon my post
And you pick at the latch
You can't find the heart
So you lean on the craft
But broken people
Don't have to break people too

I put my weight in your arms
And I fell right through
Put my weight in your arms
And I fell
Weight in your arms and I let
You tell me to

I may never forgive you
You may never forgive me
We may never forgive each other
But I may never
I may never
Forgive myself

I'm always talking to you
It's a run-on sentence
Sometimes I swear you can hear
Me talking to you

I may never forgive you
I may never forgive you
