

Dry As Sand

Madison Cunningham

So your heart is inside out
All your friends have let you down
Love slipped out the door without a sound
With every new promise there lies a deeper doubt

You think you see it coming but it turns before it can find you
You stare at what you want for so long it's starting to blind you

Dark as night and dry as sand
The meaning filters right through your hands
Silence is your dearest friend
With every new beginning there comes a faster end

You think you see it coming but it turns before it can find you
You stare at what you want for so long it's starting to blind you

I can't tell you what you're fighting for
I can only tell you what I see
I wish that I could say it well, like it felt
To watch the evening fall on your face
Your beautiful face

Time and sorrow burn the fuse
You patch the hole with water and it seeps right through
What on earth has been holding you
This time around you just needed proof
