

Golden Cathedrals

Matt Costa

We all know that feeling
When phantoms and shadows make reality dreary

But don't let them conquer you
Don't let them shatter you

Some say when you disappear, there's a golden cathedral there
And all the choir children sing your name
And they glue you back together again

We all know that feeling
When someone gets you wrong
And they don't know you from Adam

We've all judged and been judged on
Some will lend a hand and your world falls off their table
And your body gives in

But don't let them conquer you
Don't let them shatter you

Some say when you disappear, there's a golden cathedral there
And all the choir children sing your name
And they glue you back together again

So don't let them conquer you
Don't let them shatter you
Don't let them conquer you
Don't let them shatter you

Some say when you disappear, there's a golden cathedral there
And all the choir children sing your name.
