Mighty Oaks

Well you crossed the border in '59
You left your family, your loved one behind
And they say that love is the water that keeps you strong
Well I know that I've been thirsting for you for too long

You picked it up, and traveled down
You've seen the sun rise over this town
You gave me a smile and you told the truth
Well I know not what I can expect from you

A lonely ride through a quiet town
A solemn soul whose tales are old and they show their shrouds
I, well, I know not what I can expect from you

With leathered skin, pale eyes of blue
A smile that shines high above two worn out boots
I, well; I know not what I can expect from you

Well I know not, what I can expect from you
You told me you'd hold me and I watched you go your way

You picked it up, you traveled down
You seen the sun over this town
