

Tear Drop

Nolan Taylor

Teardrops rolling down her cheeks
Whimpers sneaks out from underneath her shallow breath
It's cold out
She's trying not to seem
Seem like your phases bothers her one bit
Moonlight is lighting up the street
Hes gripping the wheel as tight as his grinding teeth
I love you is all that he can think
But thinking right now just makes her wanna up and leave

And he says it's alright to feel the pain of every day
And it's alright to have nothing that you want to say to me
And it's alright to feel the weight of everything
It's alright to love me from a distance when
You can't feel anything

She can't love him when she hates to even be Alive in this world
She's praying for an early grave
It's not all dark days she reminds him patiently
As she rolls her eyes there's nothing that she wants to say

He says it's alright to feel the weight of everything
And it's alright to have nothing that you want to say to me
And it's alright to feel the pain of every day
It's alright to love me from a distance when
You can't feel anything

His sleep's not right
He wakes up to make sure she's there
In one months time it's reversed
He's her weight to bear

Her sleep's not right
She wakes up to make sure he's there

Make sure they're there