This is a sermon for the vermon. A song to draw blood.

A finger in the dam trying to hold back the flood. We are down, but we're still not out.

We struggle with faith in the face of doubt.

So is it a crime to think that we've found something more subli me?

That we're somehow more alive?

That we're not just busy dying?

No coincidence, it's by design.

Herded into a pen with the rest of the swine.

Born to shine, or born to stand in line?

You decide.

So you better step up to bat, before your dreams get hammered f lat. (This is the sound)

Even when your ship has run aground.

Don't let bastards get you down.
