If only we had always lived remembering how it felt to love someone Then perhaps there would be no need for hurtful words in this world?

Our hearts, whether full of love or withered
Are always pushing others away, only to pull them back close again
And, eventually we blame it all on the moment

In our memories, we blur only the faces of those we have hurt
And with that we begin searching for a new love
We don't care, we do some shamelessly; we're only kind because we want to be loved
That's just how people are

You whispered your love to me with a shakey voice; as if you were crying
Somewhere inside of me, I had always known that my heart would be untrue

You're so gentle to everyone else that it makes me want you to think more about yourself
Do you still have enough of your heart left over to use for yourself?

I'm hopeless; it's my heart and I use it only for myself
Tell me; how is it that you've come to love someone like me?

(Enduring, withstanding, yet it eventually overflows) Everytime I lied for my own sake, all you did was allow tears to fall from our eyes
(He knew even before you were born)
God knew that everything would happen, and so He gave you big eyes

After that, I realized that more than anything and anyone
I myself was the one I held the dearest

Yet despite that, despite all of that You told me that you loved me more than anyone and anything in the world

You didn't even know that that was a form of gentleness

Your heart had always, always been for there for someone else's sake
But just how much have you been able to love yourself?

Everyone around me was always too gentle, too kind
But just how much was I able to love someone else?

People say that words reflect how a person really is Tell me; why is it that God decided to make these words so close?

Our hearts are always hiding silently behind our words
Why is it that God created us with our hearts so deep inside of us?

If only our hearts and words could pile upon each other and become one in it self
Just how many of the sad lies I spoke to you would be turned into a gentle l ove?

(I was here to tell you why)
Everyone's the same; we all have "someone" who's living just for us
(You were here to tell me why)
If that's so, then why is it that there is no one that you yourself are livi ng for?

That's how you were; you liked yourself, who had been able to love someone e lse
I can say that now, too. That I love you more than myself. I like the way I am now

One's overflowing tears for another are, in itself, proof of the existance o f love
You were the one who taught me that - you, who created my heart

"Who was this all for? It was for myself," I can say it as it is Yet, we, as people, keep on living

I don't call that gentleness anymore

Your heart had always, always been for there for someone else's sake
Yet you must have somehow found a way to love yourself as well

I wonder if I can find love someday, too?
If I can become someone like you?
Just how much can I give myself to someone else?

Tears. You were crying, as if your heart had screamed aloud
Almost as if it was praying so hard that you wouldn't hate me

You loved, didn't you? You loved people
Loved people so much that you let your heart wither
You even let your own self wither

You whispered your love to me with a shakey voice; as if you were crying
As if you'd always known that our hearts would be the only thing to save us
