As always, cellphone in my pocket, I goes out today
But never a call from that one person

Feels like putting loneliness itself in my pocket
Well that is just me being me

I thought of throwing out my cellphone, just like that
But the entries and names in the phone book

Feels like living while carrying friends around
Well that is just me being weird

I feel like I don't understand anything anymore
Suddenly I want to be alone

So I turn it off, saying goodnight to myself

If only this thing does not exist
I can continue my life one more day without being reminded
That I'm alone

But because it does exist
That I have my place on someone else's pocket even today

In my leisure time
Occasional glances to my cellphone
Brings back that fight, that promise, it's all in there

Feels like living while carrying all my history
Well that is just me being me

On top of all that
Absentmindedly browsing through the phone book
There are names I can't recall, no matter what

Feels like it understands me better than me myself
This weird box, that is

I feel like I don't understand anything anymore
I want to have myself for my own

So I turn it off, saying "I'm home" to myself

If only this thing does not exist
I can continue my life one more day without being reminded
That you are not here

But because it does exist
Even the not-so-important memories, unforgettably continues to exist

Even after all that, because all that
As always, cellphone in my pocket, I goes out today

I can't even see you
I can't even hear you
But we are strangely connected

Bonded by invisible strings
Inside it I live to this day
Inside it I continue searching to this day

If only this thing does not exist
The fact that you are not here even today
The fact that we were once together
The fact that you were right beside me

All of those things
All of you and me
Can't even be put behind
Can't even be forgotten

But because it does exist
Because a thing like this exists
I can be sure even just for a little
Anywhere you might be today

Inside it there's a place I belong
