

Trying

Rhys Lewis

Endless cups of coffee and I still don't feel awake
We stayed up late exhausting all the different ways to say "I feel alone"
And you feel alone

And we're wasting our nostalgia on just covering the cracks
I wish that I could hold you without thinking of the fact that
I feel alone
And you feel alone

Well, we might not last
But it's time we ask ourselves

How much of love should feel like trying?
And how many nights should we spend fighting for it?
And is it worth the time and hurt and tears that we've been crying?
How much of love should feel like trying?
How much of love should feel like trying?

'Cause we could lose a lifetime owning up to our mistakes
And sorry words won't fix us 'cause in spite of who's to blame,
I feel alone
And you feel alone

Well, we might not last
But it's time we ask ourselves

How much of love should feel like trying?
And how many nights should we spend fighting for it?
And is it worth the time and hurt and tears that we've been crying?
How much of love should feel like trying?
Should feel like trying?

How much of love should feel like trying?
And how many nights should we spend fighting for it?
And is it worth the time and hurt and tears that we've been crying?
How much of love should feel like trying?
How much of love should feel like trying, trying?
How much of love should feel like trying?
How much of love should feel like trying?
