

Different People

Robben Ford

We took a train from Surrey to Soho
To be where we would be our only plan
With cigarettes and coffee we waited out the rain
Always touching, always hand in hand

And now you're telling me that we're just different people
We weren't so different then
And our love would never end
Do you really think that we're such different people
Or did you just forget how to love me

Just little things would bring us together
So nothing's free, it can be so worth while
To hold on to something precious
Something time cannot command
Something held between two lovers
Between a woman and a man

And now you're telling me that we're just different people
We weren't so different then
And our love would never end
Do you really think that we're such different people
Or did you just forget how to love me

Different now we may well be
'Cause I knew you by your love for me

And now you're telling me that we're just different people
We weren't so different then
And our love would never end
Do you really think that we're such different people
Or did you just forget how to love me
