Bone Structure

Ron Pope

Playing scratch offs with the pull tab of a tallboy on your fro nt steps.
Helicopters dancing over us, retreat inside.

Then we both got sick from the window of a taxi,
The driver didn't mind, so we laughed in the backseat.
In the morning you asked if I took you to bed,
I said, "When I do, you'll remember it."

Your bone structure was more striking to me than all your lack
of empathy.
Your bone structure made it so I couldn't see you were indiffer ent to me.

This coffee's too strong, I am shaking, I guess that's why I st ill come here.
You are day drunk, my salvation, whistling "I'm On Fire."

Your bone structure was more striking to me than all your lack
of empathy.
Your bone structure made it so I couldn't see you were indiffer ent to me.

We share a twelve dollar bottle of brandy in the parking lot Behind a dumpster so everybody else can Pretend that they don't notice and we all can eat our breakfast in peace.

You spit champagne through your front teeth, slap my face and l augh like a lunatic in a movie.
You cut right through me, come out on the other side.

Your bone structure was more striking to me than all your lack
of empathy.
Your bone structure made it so I couldn't see you were indiffer ent to me.

Your bone structure was more striking to me than all your lack
of empathy.
Your bone structure made it so I couldn't see you were indiffer ent to me.
