without a trace

Ryman Leon

I don't remember where I was
But we were up to watch the morning come
There's something 'bout getting old
That makes you feel so young
Like I remember seventeen
Feeling something like twenty-one
Then being twenty-three
And not knowing who I was

'Cause you're too far
Till you're too close
And it's too long
Till the time goes
And it's too soon
And now it's too late
The minute I closed my eyes
You left without a trace

Oh I got used to everything being the same
And then you changed

Same shirt in the back of my car
Still smells like you but I don't know where you are Can't drive back home without passing your place
So I think about you like everyday
And I miss that hill we used to climb
When the sun got low and you hair would shine
Went back today but it don't feel right
And I can't get back the time

'Cause you're too far
Till you're too close
And it's too long
Till the time goes
And it's too soon
And now it's too late
The minute I close my eyes
You left without a trace

Oh I got used to everything being the same
And then you changed
And then you changed
And then you changed
And now we're not the same
And then you changed
And then you changed
And then you changed
And now we're not the same

(And then you changed)
(And then you changed)
(And then you changed)
(And now we're not the same)
And then you changed
