There's a book by an author named Carol S. Pearson from the mid-70s called "The Hero Within: Six Archetypes We Live By"
Even though it's nearly forty years old, the book still speaks of the journey each of us takes through our lives

The Innocent

The Orphan

The Wanderer

The Warrior

The Martyr

The Magician

We float between these identities

They change as the phases of our lives take center stage, one after the other

Today I feel like a martyr, but tomorrow I'll be a warrior

For even though my time as the magician is drawing to an end, the innocent in me will continue to believe and hope

In love and that the goodness of humanity will prevail

Here's Hierophant's take on the journey from innocence to experience

Which is another way of saying from innocence to orphanhood

Here's Fuck You (We're Famous)

Put all ten middle fingers in the air and dance my brothers and sisters

If we can't dance a little on the last night of the last light, all is lost
