Takeoff

T-minus ninety seconds and counting. Sound supression water system now being armed for release. We have three main engines ready for ignition. Space shuttle now on internal power. Liquid oxygen and liquid hydrogen fill and draining valves are closed. Saw the rocket booster flight data recorders are activated. Thirty seconds into the flight, Atlanta's almost two miles in altitude, almost six miles downrange from the Kennedy Space Center already, traveling five hundred miles an hour. One minute thirty seconds into the flight, fifteen miles downrange, traveling almost two thousands miles an hour. Three good auxiliary power units, three good fuel cells, three good main engines. Ten seconds away from summit-rocket booster separation. Nine, eight, seven, six, five-three, two, one, zero
