

Flash Boom

Tall Heights

Past the cold window
Howling through the front door
Oh my, came her squall of snow woke my slumbering core
Oh my, just a flash boom

I never knew thunder could moan at ice
And I didn't know the lightening ever struck here twice
And I never knew the power of the winter sky
And I did not have a thing to say to you

Days once grass and smiles
Nights once holding, folding on in our minds
Oh my, and in that summertime
Clouds as angry left us feeling so tired
First a flash boom in the bedroom

I never knew thunder could moan at ice
And I didn't know the lightening ever struck here twice
And I never knew the power of the winter sky
And I did not have a thing to say to you

Like take these hands
And take these feet
Take anything you need

I never knew thunder could moan at ice
And I didn't know the lightening ever struck here twice
And I never knew the power of the winter sky
If I ever knew the thunder could moan at ice
If I ever knew the lightening ever struck here twice
And if I ever knew the power of the winter sky
Would I be alone beneath the frozen moon?
Take these hands, take these feet
Oh, take anything you need
Oh, take anything you need
