

When I Came Through

The Clientele

Once I saw your death in your turned face
And I came into the garden in the sunlight
And I kissed your hands in the shade

And I followed from the garden to the station
And the fields were singing in the wind
When I came through