I was born in Arkansas, me mammy was a squaw, pappy hailed from Timbuktu
There's one thing I recall that I hated most of all
Was that little green shed, our Loo

It had a Cedar shingle roof, I swear that was the truth Hinges all rusting and corroding, 'twas a ghastly shade of green

The worst you've ever seen, it stood there at the bottom of the garden

Well one day when I was six, I was chopping at some sticks

When a nasty little gleam came to my eye I ran down to the John and shoved it off the lawn In to the river flowing gently by

Soon my Pappy called my name ,he yelled "Hey, what's ya game $\verb!?"$

Why did you shove our privy in the drink
Well then I shook with fear and shed a little tear
I said it wasn't me I didn't think

It had a Cedar shingle roof, I swear that was the truth Hinges all rusting and corroding, 'twas a ghastly shade of green

The worst you've ever seen, it stood there at the bottom of the garden

Then my Pappy told to me, how George Washington, felled the tree

Then he went and owned up straight away And he because he told the truth, that honest youth foresooth

His Pappy didn't punish him that day

Well, me being a little green, I thought I'd best come clean

So I told my Pappy how I sank that shack Well, with a rebel cry of glee he hauled me o'er his knee

Proceeded to wop me blue and black

It had a Cedar shingle roof, I swear that was the truth Hinges all rusting and corroding, 'twas a ghastly shade of green

The worst you've ever seen, it stood there at the bottom of the garden

Since I hadn't told a lie, I asked my Pappy why He sat there and he answered with a frown Well, George Washington's pappy, he, wasn't sitting in the tree

When that little bastard went and chopped it down
