

Everybody Just Stood There

The Taxpayers

While the man in the street was screaming for help from the people nearby, the kid next to him shook violently

And everybody just stood there

While the woman in rags looked to the heavens with her arms out, the other prayed for a God to deliver them

And everybody just stood there

On the floor, in a house covered in rain from the inside out:

Floorboards creaking

Front door shaking

The radio blaring and all the glasses breaking

You can run to the car, drive away from the scene, put the television on, and try to forget everything

But there's a skeleton waiting in the basement, banging on the bedposts, beggin' for his medicine

Everybody just stood there