

No Other Life Is Attractive

Thirteen Senses

When you're landing, do you reach out?
They're lining up to shoot you down
Banging your head on the pavement
And no other life is attractive

Get your teeth in, sophistication
Took the road and it got demoted
The least adapted, drive impression
At least appearance seems dead

And soon the most obvious fear will arise
That you die in this life, and there's nowhere to go
The consequence is eating away at the heart
And I keep forgetting how to write good songs

One perspective you could look at
Without doubt this life's attractive
So we're drifting it feels I've lost faith
Only this life is attractive

We did our damage and not in anyone else
I couldn't do that now, and don't even try
A constant wonder is a way out
I draw conclusions for myself out loud

And soon the most obvious fear will arise
That you die in this life, and there's nowhere to go
The consequence is eating away at the heart
And I keep forgetting how to write good songs

And soon the most obvious fear will arise
That you die in this life, and there's nowhere to go
The consequence is eating away at the heart
And I keep forgetting how to write good songs

And soon the most obvious fear will arise
That you die in this life, and there's nowhere to go
The consequence is eating away at the heart
And I keep forgetting how to write good songs