Emma continued on and off with the crew of 'plunderers cove'
Of course taking time to finish school, helped by her good friend Preston

Along with Joe, they went on to find other wonders of the world
Through it all, she learned to take time for herself too
Turns out that a little soul-searching did her some good
The 'warrior girl' who she always thought she could be was finally a reality

Preston returned to the sacred scholar's temple and did have some beautiful alone time with some good books
He and his dad viewed and recorded hundreds of new species of beautiful birds

But it wasn't long before he longed to be back with his friends
He continued to push himself outside his comfort zone and have many more adventures with his new friends
He also saw like, all the birds

Joe went on to found a home that would allow people of any background or identity to have a safe place whenever they felt alone or vilified by the world
After having experienced what true friendship was, it was more important than ever to be a friend to those who needed it
Emma and Preston were indeed always there to help
And now, thanks to this home, friends and acceptance were never in short demand again

Thomas and Leo went on to create many more stories, all while remaining the best of friends
