A Space Between

ThouShaltNot

Billy was a car crash, all he ever knew was pain
Lived a milli-milli-millisecond, never born again
Though no one saw him coming, plenty witnessed his remains
Laid a wreath, though they never knew him
Me, I'm just the rain
Laid Billy to eternal rest, eternal rust
I soak the dust that covers him
I wait for all the others
They all have names
They all have names

Red Harry was a bright young spark
That grew and burned old London Town
In '66 he flew to bits, he tore it down
Bubonic bliss
And me, I'm just the kiss our maker blew to put him out
To eternal rest, eternal rust
To dust, to ash, I covered up
I waited for the others [they all have names]
Waited for the others [they all have names]
Waited for the others [they all have names]

We all have names, we all have names
We all have names, we all have names
We all have names, we all have names
We all have names, we all have names
We all have names

Georgie was a cut on Hitler's knee
He ran for weeks, turned shades of green
They kidnapped me and made him clean
Ohhhhh
On winter nights I hear him scream
I cover up, I wait for all the others
Jane, her mother was hurricane
Who swept the plains
And sneezed away a continent
With me, the sea, the team that made a myth
By hiding it became a hit on Broadway
But it wasn't quite the same
They all forgot our names

We all have names, we all have names
We all have names, we all have names
We all have names, we all have names
We all have names, we all have names
We all have names...
