

Coffee

Tori Kelly

I envy the cup of coffee that kisses you every morning
The pillow caressing your cheek when you are tired and yawning
I'm jealous of the steering wheel you wrap your hands around
The seat belt on your chest, hearing your heart, holding you down
I envy the cup of coffee that kisses you every morning

I would jump over the edge for you, to get to you
I'd walk an ocean to get to you, next to you

I'm missing you way too much
I'm missing you, missing you way too much
And I'm wishing you were right here because
I'm missing you way, way, way too much
I know that it's so silly of me
To be jealous of all these stupid things
But I'm missing you, missing you way too much
I'm missing you way, way, way too much

Am I crazy to want to hold you like clothes on a body?
I would trade places with the air that rushes by you so softly

I would jump over the edge for you, to get to you
I'd walk an ocean to get to you, next to you

I'm missing you way too much
I'm missing you, missing you way too much
And I'm wishing you were right here because
I'm missing you way, way, way too much
I know that it's so silly of me
To be jealous of all these stupid things
But I'm missing you, missing you way too much
I'm missing you way, way, way too much

And you got the things I need and they're always out of reach
And I always have to dream to get you next to me
And it's unfair
Even the stars that shine get to see you at night
It all reminds me of you and maybe that's the reason why I'm always

Missing you way too much, yeah
And I'm wishing you were out here because I'm missing you
And it's so silly of me
To be jealous of all these stupid things
But I'm missing you, missing you way too much
I'm missing you way, way, way too much
And it's unfair
And it's unfair
