Dancing Choose

TV on the Radio

He's a what? He's a what? He's a newspaper man And he gets his best ideas from a newspaper stand From his boots to his pants to his comments and his rants He knows that any little article will do

Though he expresses some confusion 'bout his part in the plan And he can't understand that he's not in command The decisions underwritten by the cash in his hand Bought a sweater for his weimaraners too

Now I'm no mad man but that's insanity Feast before famine and more before family Goes and shows up with more bowls and more Cups and the riot for the last hot meal erupts

Corrupts his hard drive through the leanest months Shells out the hard cash for the sickest stunts On aftershave, on gasoline He flips the page and turns the scene

In my mind I'm drowning butterflies Broken dreams and alibis, that's fine I've seen my palette blown to monochrome Hollow heart clicks hollow tone it's time

Eye on authority, thumb prints a forgery Boy ain't it crazy what the lights can do For counterfeit community every opportunity Wasted as the space between the flash tattoo

And the half-hearted hologram posed for the party Now he gloss full bleed on a deaf dumb tree Cod liver dollar signs, credit card autograph Down for the record but not for freedom

Angry young mannequin, American apparently Still to the rhythm better get to the back of me Can't stand the vision, better tongue the anatomy Gold plated overhead blank transparency

In the days of old you were a nut Now you need three bumps before you cut Not that I should care about, nothing I ain't scared of But I guess, you had to be there

In my mind I'm breeding butterflies Broken dreams and alibis, that's fine I've seen my palette blown to monochrome Hollow heart clicks hollow tone in time

I see you figured in your action pose Foam injected Axl Rose life size Should something shake you and you drop the news Lord just keep your dancing shoes off mine
