The Ark

Visions of Atlantis

The waves are as huge As they never where before Crossing silently the summits Of those now parting sea from shore Waiting for the sun It's glittering on a velvet rug World's end was full of riot Like an apocalyptic drug Human kind with all machines Just too blind within its dreams Hundred years of worthless lore Mayas knew so long before This is the entrance, the past awakes Another culture, another dominion breaks This is the end, this is our way There's nothing left and nothing left to say Standing on this ark And heading for a new horizon Eliding ruins of the old world Underneath is advising Heed the drone of this machine A postponing elegy... This is the entrance, the past awakes Another culture, another dominion breaks This is the end, this is our way There's nothing left and nothing left to say