

Flower Crowns

Ward Thomas

We threw roses onto sacred ground
Two girls laughing in our flower crowns
That memory is living in me now and forever

You were mine before time began
Now we're somehow making wedding plans
I'm scared to lose you and you understand
We're like the diamond shining on your hand, forever

I'm still surprised that we are grown already
One small part of me is still not ready
To leave our home, to let you go, to see our childhood fade
To have and hold, and lose and know that everything will change
But I'll love you the same forever

When our family was torn like lace
We became each other's safest place
And I will keep the promises we made, forever

I'm still surprised that we are here already
One small part of me is still not ready
To see us grow, to let us go, to miss our family name
To have and hold, and lose and know that everything will change
But I'll love you the same forever

They're throwing roses onto sacred ground
Two women laughing in our flowered gowns

I'm still surprised that we are grown already
One small part of me is still not ready
To see us grow, to let us go, to miss our family name
To have and hold, and lose and know that everything will change
But I'll love you the same forever
