

Should've asked your name
Instead of waiting for someone else to say it
You didn't feel the same
Or maybe that's just how I replay it

It wasn't the way you move your hips
I fell in love with your confidence
You'd say the things that no one would say
You're eyes they took no double takes
You looked at things like you owned the place
I wish that I could say I do the same

But I know that I'm not confident enough
To tell you that my body's burning up
When you only said two words
The best two words I ever heard
Said a thousand times, but not as good
Say 'em one more time please if you could
But I know, I know that I'm not confident enough
To ask you for your name

You laughed out loud to what someone said
And I don't know why but my face turned red
Guess I thought you might've noticed me
I should've said what was in my head
That when you laughed these feelings spread
And also that you got nice teeth

It wasn't the way you move your hips
I fell in love with your confidence
You'd say the things that no one would say
Your eyes they take no prisoners
But I'd love to be your visitor
Could you mouth the words and tell me what to say?

But I know that I'm not confident enough
To tell you that my body's burning up
When you only said two words
The best two words I ever heard
Said a thousand times, but not as good
Say 'em one more time please if you could
But I hate, I hate that I'm not confident enough
To ask you for your name

And if you feel the same
I know you probably don't
And if I ever change
I know I probably won't
But maybe just in case
Could I ask you for your name?